Copyright Law

US Code, Title 17

Sect. 106
Exclusive rights of creators:

☑ reproduce their works
☑ modify them
☑ distribute them
☑ perform them in public
☑ display them in public

It doesn’t have to say it’s copyrighted!

Sect. 107
Fair use limits creator’s exclusive rights, when ALL these are considered:

☑ purpose/character of the use
☑ nature of the original work
☑ quantity/quality of portion to be used in relation to the whole
☑ no adverse effect on the value or marketability of the original

Sect 108
Libraries (extensions of classrooms) are granted use otherwise limited to creators:

☑ may make reproductions for students
☑ model library practices limit access to class numbers and instructors’ names

FACULTY
To use the library’s EReserve and Reserve Desk, you must agree that materials you submit are in compliance with University Libraries’ interpretation of the US Copyright Law.

Copyright Law

Fair Use consider all factors

Myth
Materials available from the library’s Reserve systems are available only to the VT community and use must be limited to private study, scholarship, or research.

Faculty may place on reserve:

Books
1 chapter from one book may be placed on reserve, including edited collections of readings and essays--each are considered a chapter of the book.

Articles: journals/newspapers
1 article from one journal title or newspaper may be placed on reserve.

Copyright Guidelines continued

US Government Publications
These are generally in the public domain, that is, they are not copyrighted and reproduction is unlimited.

Consumables
Workbooks, exercises, standardized tests and test booklets, answer sheets and the like are not appropriate for reserve because this would directly effect the market for these works (a violation of “fair use”).

Coursepacks
Custom published anthologies such as coursepacks are prepared for sale through local copy centers and bookstores and, therefore, are not appropriate for reserve because this directly effects the number of copies sold to students in the course.

© Myth about FAIR USE
It’s OK--it’s for education.

You must consider ALL 4 of the factors that determine fair use before you include someone else’s work in your own without permission.

1. Purpose and character of use
   © profit or nonprofit
   © commercial or educational
   © degree of transformation
   © value added
   © for criticism, commentary, news reporting, teaching, scholarship, research

2. Nature of the work
   © character of the work
   © e.g., fact or fiction
   © worthy of (extensive) protection?

3. Amount and substantiality
   © use only what is necessary
   © quantity and quality in relation to the whole work

4. Effect
   © Will use harm potential market for or value of the work after a portion has been used?
