

DEDICATION

This work is dedicated to the two people who were willing, not only to read drafts of this work, but to spell check it and count references. They have insisted that I do this right, and insisted that I stay on the high road. They have mentored, challenged, guided, inspired, and comforted me. They were patient with my late nights, when I hogged the computer, and read all weekend. They are my best friends and the two people who I want to be like most when I grow up—my daughters—Annie and Rachel.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to gratefully acknowledge the following people for their assistance, support, and contributions to this work:

Bruce Gagnon of the Florida Coalition for Peace and Justice for his time and patience in answering my questions. Gary Bennett and Stanley Gunn, the designers of the RTG, for their kind interest and oft-repeated detailed explanations.

The members of my graduate committee:

Gary Downey, Virginia 'Tech, for patience and unflagging good humor with my endless delays.

Richard Hirsh, Virginia 'Tech, for taking on a policy student.

Scott Hauger, AAAS/Virginia 'Tech, for supporting, inspiring, understanding, and for a fine economy of phrase.

Steve Rayner, Columbia University, for raising the bar, showing me that where there is risk there is possibility, and continually reminding me of the complexities.

The members of my graduate cohort without whom this work could not have been done, for their support and inspiration: Ellen Weertman – for her calm determination and absolute ability, Dick Smith – who led the way with good humor and who makes it all look so easy, and Diana Hoyt – who is the best friend and inspiration anyone could ever have.

The friends who listened, read, sympathized, and understood the end if not the means: Patricia Russell, Mena Abrams, Ann Folb, Allison Sandlin, Evan Douple, and Marc and Barbara Stern. Another friend, Barry Evans, who by encouraging me to articulate what I wanted to do, showed me the way.

The three people who could have stopped me, never ever questioned me, and asked every week for a year if I was done yet—with love and profound gratitude for their patience—Don and Berry Pidgeon and Robert Friedensen.
