VPI Dedicates Net Center Saturday

BLACKSBURG (Special to Daily Press) — T. Marshall Hahn Jr. returned to the university he headed for 13 years on Saturday to dedicate Virginia Tech's new Carol B. Rector Tennis Pavilion.

The $300,000 facility includes three indoor courts. It has been in operation since late 1975 and contains about 21,787 square feet of floor space. The courts are made of Uni-Turf, a fast surface.

The pavilion is located on the University intramural field across the road from the Lane Stadium parking lot.

Hahn is now executive vice president of Georgia-Pacific Corp. in Portland, Ore. Also appearing on the 10:30 a.m. program will be G. Frank Clement, rector of the Tech Board of Visitors and William E. Lavery, the current president of the school.

Mrs. Rector worked as a secretary at the school during her husband's senior year so that he could complete his work in civil engineering.

Mr. Rector is president of Rector Construction Co., involved in general contracting and real estate development.

The Rectors have been outstanding friends of the school according to a news release from the Virginia Tech News Service. The Charles W. Rector Field House at the university is named after Mr. Rector.

The tennis pavilion was designed by Carneal and Johnson of Richmond.
