Tech's Ernest Wansley pulled out his trusty leather coat and took one last glimpse into the mirror before leaving the Tech dressing room.

Wansley, dressed in a blue shirt, black pants, and black shoes, was ready for another exciting game. He had just finished his second game of the season, having played in both of Tech's previous contests.

The game against OSU was the first one that Wansley had attended as a member of the Tech basketball team. He had been a member of the junior varsity team for the past two years and was eager to make his mark on the bigger stage.

Wansley's parents had always encouraged him to play basketball, and he had been practicing every day since he was a child. He had even been invited to try out for the varsity team, but he turned it down, preferring to focus on his studies.

But when the opportunity arose to play for Tech, he knew he couldn't refuse. He was determined to make the most of his chance and leave a lasting impression.

As he walked into the gym, he couldn't help but feel a sense of excitement and nervousness. He knew this was a big game, and he was up against some of the best players in the country.

But Wansley was not one to back down. He was ready to face whatever challenges came his way. He took a deep breath and stepped onto the court, ready to prove himself.

The game was intense, and Wansley was determined to make his mark. He scored several key points and played consistently throughout the game.

In the end, Tech emerged victorious, thanks in large part to Wansley's impressive performance. He had played well against the OSU players, and his dedication and hard work had paid off.

The crowd cheered as Wansley ran off the court, his head held high. He knew that this was just the beginning. He was excited to see what the future held for him and his team.
